

Raring to go...

THOUSANDS of children are starting their school day by running or walking the Hackney Daily Mile.

Elizabeth, a teacher at Sir Thomas Abney Primary School, N16, said: "I have noticed that my class is more focused after the Daily Mile. The children are all very excited to be involved and cannot wait to go out and do it."

Lena, from Kingsmead Primary School, E9, said: "The Daily Mile makes me feel refreshed and energised.

It makes me feel ready to learn when we do it before lessons." For more info, see page 7.

PROTECTING KEY SERVICES

THE Mayor of Hackney has announced details of his first budget and pledged to protect key services and keep costs as low as possible for residents in the face of continued Government cuts.

The borough has been one of the hardest hit by Government austerity measures and increasing pressures on services. Since 2010, the Council has had to find £152million to balance its annual budget, due to grant cuts by Government, and rising cost pressures of £42million.

More cuts in future years will mean that from 2010/11 to 2020/21, the Government's annual grant to Hackney will have fallen by £139million, a drop of 45 per cent.

To help protect the services residents rely on, or value the most, this year's budget proposes a Council Tax increase of three per cent. For band D properties, this works out at 60p per week, but will raise an extra £2million a year.

The Government wants local authorities to increase Council Tax by two per cent, to help fund social care for older and disabled people. The other one per cent will go towards services such as looking after vulnerable children, youth work, parks, temporary accommodation and street cleaning.

This will be the second Council Tax rise in Hackney, following a decade-long freeze, which saved average bill payers £1,400.

The budget for 2017/18 – set to be agreed on 1 March – will deliver another £13.8million in savings, made through efficiencies, income generation and reducing management and the cost of providing services.

Mayor of Hackney, Philip Glanville, said: "These are very challenging times. Councils like Hackney, which serve populations with high levels of need, have been hit particularly hard during the austerity years, and I'm proud that we have managed this huge challenge, whilst protecting local services.

"We know that it's not been an easy time for many of our residents too, and I'm committed to keeping Council Tax as low as possible, however we cannot continue to subsidise Government cuts. That's why I'm proposing a Council Tax rise of three per cent.

"If we are to keep Hackney a place for everyone, a place to be proud of, we cannot afford to let our ambitions shrink with our budget. We need to stay optimistic about the future of our borough, and keep our aspirations and expectations high, and this is reflected in some of our key priorities around creating jobs, investing in new schools and building genuinely affordable homes."

Jobs under threat

Len Maloney, who runs JC Motors in Haggerston, has seen the rateable value of his business increase by £10,000. He says he is 'so stressed'

RESIDENTS are being urged to sign a petition to help protect Hackney's independent businesses from huge hikes in rates.

From April, hundreds of businesses across the borough will have to find tens of thousands of pounds extra. Some face an increase of over £100,000.

This is because business rates are based on property prices, and the Government has revalued business premises so they are in line with current market values. Property prices have more than doubled in parts of Hackney, so many businesses will face a huge new bill they can't afford.

The petition, launched by the Council and the East End Trades Guild, which represents local small businesses, calls on the Government to rethink its plans.

Cllr Guy Nicholson, Cabinet Member for Planning, Business and Investment, said: "This is a postcode lottery that doesn't care about people or their businesses. The rise in rates could tear the heart out of our communities and our local economy.

“Ministers should come to see what businesses like ours do for communities”

"Our business community, from established family businesses to innovative start-ups, is the corner stone of a vibrant, enterprising and successful Hackney."

Krissie Nicolson, founding organiser of the East End Trades Guild, said: "Independent traders bring a human face to the market and align commerce with the common good. They are a valued part of our communities.

"If we lose our small businesses, then we lose our city. The East End has a fine tradition of collective action, we must take a stand."

Len Maloney runs JC Motors in Haggerston, which works with a local charity to provide job opportunities and mentoring for young people. Len's rateable value has increased by £10,000.

He said: "I am so stressed because I see no hope for the business. Ministers should come down to ground level to see what businesses like ours do for local communities."

Stationery manufacturers Baddeley Brothers, which opened in the borough 157 years ago, has seen its rateable value rise from £60,000 to £156,000. It has a proud tradition of hiring and training local residents, and currently employs 25 people.

Director Charles Pertwee said: "With this sort of increase, we're talking about people's jobs. As a family business in its sixth generation, this is not something we wish to consider."

Education matters

THE future of schools in Hackney was the hot topic at a public consultation event held at City Academy last month.

Dozens of the Hackney Matters online citizens' panel – who regularly contribute their views to help shape Council policy – attended the event on 26 January, adding their opinions to those of thousands of residents who have already filled in an online or paper questionnaire.

The discussion was part of the 'Hackney: Schools For Everyone' consultation and key questions put to residents – who represented a cross-section of the borough – were about what people think of the current education offer in Hackney; forced academisation; and Government proposals to introduce more grammar schools.

The event was

While the adults planned their future education, kids got creative introduced by the Mayor of Hackney, Philip Glanville, and Deputy Mayor, Cllr Anntoinette Bramble, and chaired by Group Director for Children, Adults and Community Health, Anne Canning.

Cllr Bramble said: "It felt apt that we held this discussion at City Academy, which achieves some of the top GCSE results in the country. This school – and all of our fantastic secondary and primary schools – really demonstrates just how far we've come over the last 15 years or so, from some of the worst schools to some of the very best.

"In 2003, when the then government introduced its original academies programme, we consulted local people and they responded with a clear demand for non-selective, non-denominational, mixed-sex comprehensive schools. This allowed us to negotiate the first phase of the academies programme to deliver exactly that.

"The current government has proposed huge changes to education. This feedback will help us to lobby government to ensure we can deliver the schools Hackney wants."

News in brief

Levy could help tackle ASB

A late-night levy could raise over £350,000 per year

HACKNEY Police and the Council are asking residents and businesses what they think of proposals to introduce a late-night levy on premises serving alcohol between midnight and 6am.

Hackney currently has 399 premises licensed to sell alcohol between those hours.

The Council wants to help support and sustain the borough's nightlife – which has made a valuable contribution to wider cultural and economic growth – however, it has also had an impact on public services, with increased levels of anti-social behaviour, crime, noise nuisance and litter.

The levy is expected to raise around £362,000 per year, which would go towards the costs of managing the late-night economy, including a contribution towards the £1.4million cost of policing and community safety.

The levy is set at a national level by the government, based on a premises' rateable value. In Hackney, that would vary from £299 to £1,259 per year.

Around 40 businesses already take part in a voluntary scheme, raising around £56,000 per year. The voluntary levy has helped to fund additional patrols by community safety wardens on Friday and Saturday nights in Dalston and Shoreditch. It has been well-received by residents and pivotal in addressing anti-social behaviour.

Free half marathon and 5.5k places go up for grabs

RESIDENTS can secure one of 250 free places in this year's Hackney half marathon, or be one of a 1,000 running for free in a shorter 5.5k event, both on 30 April.

The offer is available to residents, local charities and community groups, and will be allocated on a first come first served basis between 10 and 21 February. The free places have been secured by the Council, from Virgin Sport, which has taken over the annual Run Hackney half marathon to create a new festival of sport called Virgin Sport Hackney.

Residents applying for 5.5k places must be aged 15 or over, and 17 or over for a half marathon place. To apply, e-mail: park.events@hackney.gov.uk stating your name and postcode; or state the charity/group name, charity/group registration number and how many places required. (Maximum of 10 per group).

In addition to the free spaces available, there is a 50 per cent concession entry rate on full price entries for residents who are in receipt of benefits, or are in full-time education.

To claim the discount e-mail: hello@virgin-sport.com; or call: 0800 044 8000.

A festival for our future

Celebrating 'hard-won victories of yesterday' – and inspiring the next generation

WHERE was your first kiss, defining moment or personal victory?

The Council has launched a drive to unearth these local stories and experiences as part of a drive to build, understand and immortalise LGBTQI+ (Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual, Transgender, Queer and Intersex plus) history in Hackney.

The crowdsourcing project, using online citizen-historian site Historypin.org, is just one of a host of ways that the Council plans to celebrate the borough's vibrant LGBTQI+ community, and work with local people to create and facilitate the first-ever Hackney LGBTQI+ festival.

The project was unveiled by Mayor of Hackney, Philip Glanville, at a launch of LGBT History Month in the borough on 1 February.

Starting this month and continuing throughout the year, the Council will be helping to generate, curate and promote a series of community-led events, designed to support equality, inclusion and cohesion in the borough.

The plans build on the Council's collaboration

“A Hackney LGBTQI festival will ensure our values of inclusivity are shared with the generations of tomorrow” with world-famous artist Stik, who last year created a Hackney banner for the London Pride parade. The festival will support and celebrate the borough's well-established LGBTQI+ community and venues.

The launch at Hackney Museum, was attended by over 100 people from the local LGBTQI+ community, and featured moving speeches from Mayor Glanville, Stik, performer I'm Empire, and Emma Winch, Hackney Museum's heritage manager.

Another key objective of this year's festival is to ask the community to help address a gap in Hackney Museum's collection of records, artefacts and first person narratives that capture the borough's fascinating

LGBTQI+ history.

The festival also aims to be a call-to-action, bringing together the local community to inspire new collaborations and events.

Mayor Glanville, who will be taking a leading role in the festival, said: "Hackney is well known for its diversity and we have a fascinating history of welcoming everyone. A Hackney LGBTQI+ festival will not only remember the history of the hard-won victories of yesterday, but will celebrate the community of today, and ensure our values of inclusivity are shared with future generations."

Anyone with ideas about possible events or projects as part of a Hackney LGBTQI+ festival can e-mail: tara.hudson@hackney.gov.uk; or call: 020 8356 3261.

It is recommended that children aged 5-18 should do 60 minutes of physical activity every day

We're all doing the Daily Mile

THOUSANDS of children at 11 primary schools are taking part in the Hackney Daily Mile in order to get fitter by running or walking for 15 minutes every day.

Lena, from Kingsmead Primary School, E9, said: "The Daily Mile makes me feel refreshed and energised. It makes me feel ready to learn when we do it before lessons."

Elizabeth, a teacher at Sir Thomas Abney Primary School, N16, said: "I have noticed that my class is more focused after the Daily Mile. They are more engaged in their learning, and I feel I have more energy when I'm teaching. I have also noticed it has improved the focus of a child in my class who has autism."

"The children are all very excited to be involved and cannot wait to go out and do it."

The Daily Mile idea was first developed at St Ninians Primary School in Stirling, Scotland, after Head Teacher Elaine Wyllie had covered a Year Five PE class and noticed that the children were not fit.

She asked the children what they could do to increase their fitness levels, and they suggested running for 15 minutes as part of every school day. Teachers worked out that during that 15 minutes, the children would cover about a mile distance, and so the concept was born.

Shereka, a parent at Mossbourne Riverside Academy, E15, said:

"It's a great way to take in fresh air and raise the children's learning and attention span."

In 2015/16, the National Child Measurement

Programme found that 12.5 per cent of all Hackney four to five-year-olds were obese, the fourth highest rate in the country. By the time Hackney children leave primary school, 27 per cent of Year Six children were recorded as obese.

Cllr Jonathan McShane, Cabinet Member for Health, Social Care and Devolution, said: "The national physical activity guidelines recommend that children aged between five and 18 should be getting at least 60 minutes of physical activity every day, and the Daily Mile is a great way of contributing to this."

Adam, a PE co-ordinator at Gayhurst Community School, E8, said: "The Hackney Daily Mile is a lovely way to encourage those children who do not necessarily seek out physical activity to become more aware of the positive effects exercise can have on their bodies and minds."

"I see an improvement in the concentration of the children, and every child is keen to take part."

Tom Panagiotopoulos, Head Teacher of St Paul's with St Michael's, E8, said: "We take the register in the playground, the kids are ready to go, they come back, and the lesson starts that much quicker."

Manu, a pupil at Gayhurst Community School, E8, said: "I like the Hackney Daily Mile because it gets my energy out and at the end it makes me feel happier. And I like racing!"

Lessons from the past

The theme of this year's Holocaust Memorial Day was 'How can life go on?'

TO this day I cannot stand the smell of warm milk," Holocaust survivor Channah Greenberg says.

She was only a child, hiding behind a cupboard as her mother made her a cup of hot milk, when Nazi officers came and took her parent away. Channah never saw her mother again. Against all odds, Channah survived the Nazi's mission to exterminate the entire Jewish population and other 'undesirables' of Europe. Six million people, including both her mother and father, did not.

As part of international Holocaust Memorial Day on 27 January, Hackney remembered the many victims who suffered during the Second World War and in subsequent genocides around the world.

Alongside Channah Greenberg's harrowing personal account, there were moving speeches from Cllr Ian Sharer and Cllr Harvey Odze, as well as reflections from students at The Urswick School, who had been on a study visit to the Auschwitz concentration camp in Poland.

The theme of this year's Holocaust Memorial Day was 'how can life go on?' which considered how individuals, communities and nations can survive in the wake of such crimes, and the responsibility we all have to ensure that they do not happen again.

Pupils from Simon Marks Jewish Primary School and The Olive School Hackney, a Muslim faith school, came together to sing 'We Shall Overcome', a song with a message of hope, popular with defenders of civil rights across the globe.

Music was used throughout the moving ceremony, starting with a solo cello performance of Tchaikovsky's Chanson Triste by eight-year-old Finn Anderson-Hendra (pictured left). The Jewish resistance song of the ghettos – 'Undzer Shtetl Brent' (our town is burning), – was performed in Yiddish, by Barry Davis.

In her opening speech, The Speaker of Hackney, Cllr Rosemary Sales, said: "By standing together here and in other ceremonies throughout the world, we make our contribution to preventing further holocausts and ensuring that life goes on."

After the ceremony, The Speaker – together with Mayor Philip Glanville and some of the pupils who had taken part in the ceremony – placed flowers at the Holocaust memorial in the Town Hall Square.

The memorial holds the apt inscription: 'Commandment number one of any civilised society is this: let people be different'.

Hackney

Hackney is one of the most diverse places in the UK. In this regular feature, we profile the borough's great & good or just plain interesting

Back to where the story began

By Harriet Worsley

I WAS nine when I left Hackney, the world I'd grown up in, for Nigeria," says Oladipo Agboluaje.

"I remember the heat suddenly hitting me, and the speed with which our car drove away from the airport... speed limits don't mean quite the same thing in Nigeria," he adds.

This month, however, the award-winning playwright is back in the borough as his latest play, 'New Nigerians', receives its world premiere at the Arcola theatre in Dalston.

As its name suggests, the play is based in Africa's most populous nation, where the young Oladipo himself remained for the rest of his primary school education, right through until completion of his BA degree at the University of Benin. In 1995, however, he returned to the UK and turned his mind, seriously, to playwriting for the first time.

"As children, my brother and I had made cartoon strips together," Oladipo recalls. Adding: "He was good at drawing, so he did the pictures while I came up with the stories."

The young boy wrote countless short stories too. He laughs: "In fact, I was writing all the time. Whether it was any good or not... that's another question!"

Settling in South London, however, he began to focus on theatre. "I decided to enter a writing competition at the Birmingham Rep," he says. Adding: "But being young, and being me, I didn't read the small print to the end. It turned out that the competition was only open to Birmingham-based writers. I didn't find out until I'd sent off my submission and they wrote back saying: there's a bit of a problem..."

The theatre, however, liked his misplaced submission so much that they offered to help him find a London theatre company to stage it, if he could turn it into a finished play. Even so, the young playwright did not quite believe his luck.

He says: "A year later, I got a letter from them asking for my finished play. I had to knuckle down and pull it together in a matter of weeks."

So it was that, in 2003, his first play 'Early Morning' was produced by

"I've been coming to the Arcola as an audience member for years, so to finally have a play of my own here is very exciting"

Futuretense and performed at the Oval House theatre in Lambeth.

"And it was then that I first realised: this is real,

it's actually happening," he says.

Since then, Oladipo has written an extraordinary 14 plays and won accolades including the prestigious Alfred Fagon Award, which celebrates the work of black British playwrights.

Nigeria looms large in his work but, says Oladipo: "I would say that my Hackney upbringing has influenced my writing, too. There was such a strong Nigerian community surrounding me during those years. We were in and out of the homes of uncles and aunts. I had no idea that not everyone in Hackney ate Nigerian food. Those communities and characters have definitely found their way into my plays."

Oladipo himself has found his way back to the borough several times, too.

He says: "I've had two plays staged at the Hackney Empire now, and each time it was a big deal for me, a coming home. I've been coming to the Arcola as an audience member for years, too, so to finally have a play of my own here is very exciting."

Dig deep at green gym

A CONSERVATION charity has launched a free 'green gym' in Hackney, as part of an 'ecotherapy' scheme to improve the wellbeing of Londoners.

Each workout session can involve anything from planting trees and flowers, to building nesting boxes for wildlife.

The project, led by The Conservation Volunteers (TCV), will focus on promoting wellbeing for people who are at risk of developing a mental health condition, however, it is open to anyone.

“Interacting with green spaces can help people manage their mental health”

The launch was attended by Cllr Jonathan McShane, Cabinet Member for Health and Social Care, and Paul Farmer CBE, CEO of mental health charity Mind.

Guests had the opportunity to learn about the positive impact of the scheme on mental and physical health, and get involved in a little conservation work.

Chris Speirs, Health Development Manager at TCV, said: “Green Gyms are a fun and social way to get active and improve your health and wellbeing. Everyone can join in, so please do come and give it a try.”

Paul Farmer, CEO of

Mind, added: “There is good evidence that interacting with green spaces is instrumental in helping people manage their mental health and wellbeing.”

The Hackney Green Gym takes place every Friday, from 11am to 2pm, at the Middlesex Filter Beds Nature Reserve, E5.

Have your say on new reedbed

A WATERWAYS charity is asking the public to choose the location for five new reedbeds for the River Lea Navigation. Thames21 has so far installed 750 sq metres of reedbeds as part of its 'Love The Lea' programme, which aims to improve water quality in the river.

Reedbeds increase biodiversity and habitats for wildlife, while acting as a natural filter and removing pollutants from the water.

In the next stage of the project, Thames21 is holding a public vote to allow communities to back a new reedbed in their area. Nine sites are proposed, five of which are in Hackney.

Ben Fenton, Thames21's Love The Lea Programme Manager, said: “In our recent survey, more than 90 per cent of people said that reedbeds improve an area aesthetically. Luckily, they are great for rivers and wildlife too. Recently, the public have spotted kingfishers on some of our reedbeds in Tottenham.”

The vote is open from 13 February to 31 March. All votes will also be entered into a prize draw to win prizes, including London Eye tickets.

The new reedbeds will be created between April and September, and Thames21 hopes that local people will volunteer to help with the work.

Steps towards a fossil fuel-free pension fund

THE Council is taking steps towards a fossil fuel-free pension fund for its staff, after approving plans to cut investments in companies that produce coal, gas and crude oil.

It follows a review which looked at the financial risks posed to the pension fund's fossil fuel investments in light of the Paris

Agreement, a global plan to limit global warming.

The commitment will halve the fund's exposure to fossil fuel investments over the next six years. This latest move follows a year-long piece of work to address the concerns of residents and campaign groups about Council investments.

Significant steps towards greener investments have already been made, including £25million in a 'Low Carbon Workplace' fund, which transforms office buildings into energy efficient, low emission workplaces.

Cllr Robert Chapman, Chair of the Council's Pensions Committee, said: “Climate change is probably the greatest threat facing humankind. There is also a threat to our pension fund in that investments in fossil fuels lose their value as a result of necessary world-wide action against climate change. The long-term ambition is to move away from fossil fuel investments completely.”

Women's History Month

Throughout March, Hackney Central Library, 1 Reading Lane, E8 1DY
& Rich Mix, 35-47 Bethnal Green Road, E1 6LA

ART, activism, performance and writing... Women's History Month is upon us again and, this year, there is more going on than ever.

The first Women's Day took place in New York back in 1909. That single day grew into a week; that week into a month. From New York, the celebrations spread across the world so that now, Hackney is hosting a wide range of events right across the month of March.

This year's theme is 'honouring trailblazing women in labour and business'. So don't miss 'Champions', artist Gillian Lawrence's exhibition at Hackney Central Library, which celebrates the contribution that local women have made to the cause of feminism. Don't fail to swing by Rich Mix either, where the 'Arab Women Artists Now' festival (pictured above) encompasses theatre, visual arts, music, film and discussions by female artists from across the Middle East and North Africa.

Now that's what we call trailblazing.

POLITICS, tyranny and towering ambition. All familiar themes on today's world stage. And, it turns out, on the stages of London's theatres in 1587.

Written by Christopher Marlowe a year before William Shakespeare made his playwriting debut, 'Tamburlaine' is a study of a charismatic anti-hero, whose thirst for conquest is monstrous, but his passions all too disturbingly human.

Yellow Earth's production, coming to the Arcola next month, distils the original two-part play into a troubling two hours, using an almost exclusively female cast to bridge the centuries and speak to modern audiences about the eternal themes of war, vengeance and mistrust. Tickets start at £14.

2-18 Warburton Rd, E8 3FN

"NOT even a lion rejects her cubs. I have to know why she done it."

So speaks Brenton Brown, the protagonist of 'Brixton Rock', setting the scene for yet another highly emotive production from The Big House. This time round, the theatre company for care leavers has collaborated with award-winning writer, Alex Weatle MBE. A care leaver himself, Weatle's novel has been interpreted, adapted and finally performed by the company's latest group of at-risk young people. Most of them will empathise with this story of a young care leaver, searching for his own personal and cultural identity. And under the guidance of award-winning director Ned Bennett, their performances will ensure that all who watch them do too.

Tickets are £15, with £12 concessions.

Jubilee Primary School pupils with the mural they created, which was inspired by a fun day out at Woodberry Wetlands nature reserve

Blooming marvellous

MINI Matisses and tiny Turners have painted a colourful mural at Jubilee Primary School, inspired by a nearby nature reserve.

Pupils from the Stoke Newington school visited Woodberry Wetlands after the reservoir and surrounding area were opened by Sir David Attenborough last April.

The children, aged four to 11, investigated the reserve's abundant wildlife, taking part in pond-dipping

“ We caught lots of slugs and they were really big. We also found lots of tadpoles ” sessions and minibeast hunts. The visit was part of London Wildlife Trust's outdoor education programme, funded by People's Postcode Lottery.

“We caught lots of slugs and they were really big,” said 10-year-old Eray. Adding: “We also found lots of tadpoles in the pond. I really enjoyed it.”

Back at school, the children set to work making art, which was then digitally combined by teacher Chris Neylan and printed onto aluminium sheets. The mural is now on permanent display in the school grounds.

Naomi Robinson, school art co-ordinator, said: “The children were really inspired by the big, open spaces at Woodberry Wetlands.

“Together, they have done a fantastic job of capturing the diverse wildlife, distinctive architecture and flowers, reeds and trees that bloom around the reserve.”

Woodberry Wetlands is free to visit and open daily from 9am to 4pm. For more info, visit: www.woodberrywetlands.org.uk

News in brief

Pupils create Spanish app

A GROUP of primary school children have released their own app to help others to learn Spanish.

Pupils at William Patten Primary School were filmed using Spanish language skills in role-play, singing and speaking, and the content was then developed into an app. It is hoped the ‘William Patten Spanish’ app – free to download from the Apple App Store and Google Play – could support the learning of students across the borough and further afield. Year 4 student Elliana explained: “There are different activities to do and videos to watch. It can help you learn how words are spelt and pronounced.”

Green light for ‘super college’

THE creation of a ‘super college’ serving Hackney, Tower Hamlets and Redbridge is set to go ahead.

The governing bodies of Hackney Community, Redbridge, and Tower Hamlets colleges have confirmed that a planned merger will go ahead on 1 April, creating the second largest further education college in London.

Each college will retain its name, campuses and a substantial part of its curriculum, but the establishment of New City College Corporation, as the institution will be known, will allow resources and knowledge to be shared.

Ofsted praise for Our Lady's school

Pupils from Our Lady's Convent High School

A REPORT by school inspectors has praised a Hackney secondary, ranking its students' progress in the top 10 per cent of all schools nationally.

Ofsted's recent inspection of Our Lady's Convent High School, N16, revealed that the progress made by pupils between their arrival at the school and the end of their GCSEs was among the best in the UK. The progress made by disadvantaged pupils was also above the national average.

Headteacher Justine McDonald said she was delighted with the report, adding: “We know this is an amazing school that provides incredible value and progress for our students, but it is lovely to hear that Ofsted agrees with us.”

A new start for Lyn

THANKS to a free fitness programme for over 50s, Lyn Perry has not only lost over two stone in weight in under a year, but her self-esteem has been given a boost and she's more active and outgoing.

Lyn loved disco dancing in her youth, but found years of no exercise, working in an office, and eating more than she should took their toll. At the age of 64, after taking medication to control her cholesterol, she was classified as borderline obese.

Things started to change for her however, when she found out about the New Age Games through Homerton hospital's diabetes education programme.

Funded by the Council and supported by Sport England, New Age Games offers residents a wide range of free health and fitness classes. More than 20 hours of exercise are available every week, run by professional coaches, for 300-plus participants at various locations.

Lyn, from Stoke Newington, said: "The games gave me the opportunity to dance again, through attending Soca aerobics and Brazilian dance classes. I treat the classes as fixed weekly appointments, anything else that comes up has to fit around them.

"I now walk more briskly and further, and no longer gasp for breath when walking upstairs."

As well as weight loss, Lyn's blood pressure, cholesterol, liver and kidney functions have all improved after only six months.

To anyone trying the New Age Games, Lyn had this message: "I used to stay at home, speaking to no-one; now I look forward to going to class. Everyone is so friendly and welcoming, it lifts your mood even before you begin. These classes are suitable for all fitness levels, there's something for everyone."

News in brief

New addiction recovery hub

A LEADING drug and alcohol charity has opened a new centre to help those affected by addiction to rebuild their lives.

The Hackney Recovery Service's Reintegration Hub is run by WDP, in partnership with the NHS and homelessness charity St Mungo's. Based in Westgate Street, E8, it offers services including benefits advice, family support, vocational training and therapeutic support.

The charity's chair, Yasmin Batliwala, said: "Our highly skilled staff look forward to working with colleagues in Hackney to provide this wholly comprehensive service for the benefit of residents."

Carers fitness support group

AN innovative new programme is helping carers to stay healthy, even if they cannot leave the house.

City and Hackney Carers Centre has launched 'Fit by Phone', which aims to establish weight management and healthy eating support groups, over the phone. For 45 minutes each week, carers are connected to three others and a weight-management advisor. The six-week programme costs nothing, even calls are free of charge.

There are an estimated 9 million carers in the UK, providing unpaid care to the ill, disabled or elderly, and they can often become isolated by their responsibilities. Mary, a carer who has already taken part in the course, found that it gave her strategies for resisting temptation. She said: "I put on a video, or my neighbour put Netflix on my television and there's sometimes nice things on that. It just draws my attention and moves me away from thinking about food. Or if I have a good book to read, I just plug into my Kindle."

To take part, call: 020 8533 0951; or e-mail: CCSAdmin@hackneycarers.org.uk

Health coaches offer one-to-one lifestyle change programmes

THINK health coaches are just for Hollywood stars? Think again. Hackney residents can now have one-to-one sessions to support their personal lifestyle changes, entirely for free.

The health coaching service is run by Shoreditch Trust in three locations across the borough.

Individual programmes can last up to 12 weeks, during which time residents meet their coach regularly, putting into action realistic plans to tackle issues such as weight loss, healthy eating and mood improvement.

Coaches aim to provide support and motivation, as well as equipping clients with the tools needed to stick to their health and wellbeing goals once their programme comes to an end.

Mark, a 36-year-old resident who has made use of the scheme, said: "The support was life changing and I've not only lost weight, but have been able to keep it off."

Residents can access the coaching service, free of charge, at: Stamford Hill Community Centre, N16; New Kingshold Community Centre, E9; and The Shoreditch Trust Healthy Living Centre, N1.

For more information, visit: www.shoreditchtrust.org.uk/health-coaches; or call: 07584 598 086.

1. Amelia Sawyer, Derek's 'enigma'. Amelia visited her husband's war grave in Normandy every year; 2. The first residents of Bradstock House, 1948; 3. Rasim and Gunay Attila with their wedding photo from 1959; 4. Some of the first Gascoyne estate residents; 5. Glamorous Gascoyne residents; 6. Jason Foster, right, as a child with his mum and sister; 7. Amy Quartey-Papafio, who trained as an NHS nurse

Every picture tells a story

By Derek Smith

WHEN I moved in to Gascoyne estate in South Hackney, I discovered some old photographs of the previous resident, Amelia Sawyer. I've always been fascinated to know about her life.

This enigma inspired a search for more photos and stories. So with the help of Gascoyne youth club, I interviewed more than 30 residents, past and present. Their albums of cherished snapshots told incredible stories.

The first residents arrived on Gascoyne estate in 1948. Inexpensive homes for working people were essential in low-wage post-war London, and estates like Gascoyne provided the answer.

With four housing blocks clustering round a central yard, children could play safely. It provided a space for residents to meet and talk, and soon a proud community developed.

Residents formed bonds with the estate and their neighbours, which continue today. Former resident Linda Pritchard recalled: "We were always out to play, from nine in the morning till nine at night. Everyone looked out for you, there was no danger. We could shout across balconies to our friends in opposite blocks. I'm still in touch with friends from 40 years ago."

"It felt quite special, a mixed bag of friends; multiculturalism in a bottle," said Christine Staple. Her father, Granville Foster, was one of the many West Indians who came to work for

"If I was a millionaire or won the lottery, I would have to think very strongly about moving from Gascoyne"

London Transport during the 1960s.

Similarly, Amy Quartey-Papafio came too, from Ghana and trained as a nurse. It would be hard to imagine an NHS or a transport system without contributions from people like Granville and Amy.

Gascoyne has also provided refuge and sanctuary. The estate welcomed people like Rasim and Gunay Attila, who fled from conflict in Cyprus in 1960. They proudly showed me their 1959 wedding photograph. Rasim was a stalwart of the tenant's association, and he planted the distinctive hedge that borders Gascoyne House.

Bob Stedman, a fellow community activist, set up the original youth club.

He said: "If I was a millionaire, or won the lottery, I would have to think very strongly about moving from here. Would I want to move now, with all the memories? You get a sense of belonging. I can't think of anywhere else I'd rather go now."

Filmmaker Justine Pearsall moved here in 1996 and believes there's something special about estate living.

She said: "I think it's because you feel people around you. The nice thing about the estate is the presence of other people. You're living separately, by yourself, but you're all part of a community. You're all together. The layout of the flats has been beautifully considered for communal living and family living."

Simon Lukes, who arrived in 1995, agrees.

He said: "In terms of social housing, this was a success. It's a testament to the design of the block and to the socialist values that led to its building."

And what of Amelia? Interviews with her children reveal a woman of remarkable spirit.

Widowed by the war, Amelia worked long hours, printing banknotes in the City, where she was also a union representative. She brought up a family single-handed, and had to carry coal and groceries up the four flights of stairs every day.

Her daughter, Carol, recalled: "When I say she struggled, she never actually complained about anything. It was a different lifestyle then, it was a different world."

An exhibition, 'The Golden Age of Social Housing? Life on the Gascoyne Estate', is on at Hackney Museum from 14 February to 3 June. For more info, visit: www.hackney.gov.uk/museum

A healthy eating programme from Shoreditch Trust

www.shoreditchtrust.org.uk

SHOREDITCH Trust's Food for Life Programme works with members of the community to encourage affordable, healthy eating, cooking skills and food knowledge. Raitas are cooling salads made with yoghurt, and are the perfect accompaniment to spicy curries and dals. Raitas can be made with all sorts of vegetables: carrots, peppers, courgettes, radishes and more. This is great way to add some fresh, raw salad to your hot, spicy meal. Beetroot is a good source of dietary fibre and is also an excellent source of essential vitamins and minerals. This recipe can be made with cooked or raw beetroot. If the leaves are still attached to the beetroot, they can be cooked in the same way as kale or spinach.

Beetroot raita

Makes 8 portions (as an accompaniment)

Preparation time
15 mins

Ingredients

- 500ml plain yogurt
- 3 beetroots (cooked or raw)
- 1 small red onion
- 2 tablespoons chopped coriander or mint
- Freshly ground pepper, to taste
- Green chilli to garnish (optional).

Method

- Peel the beetroots and grate them
- Cut the onion in half, then into thin, half-moon strips
- Tip the yogurt into a bowl and add the beetroot, onion and coriander. Mix well and add black pepper and chopped green chilli to taste
- If you want to add a chilli garnish, then cut the chilli into very fine slices and scatter over the top
- Serve the raita chilled.

Have your say and help shape the future of Stamford Hill

RESIDENTS can help to shape the future of Stamford Hill by having their say on the latest stage of a planning framework for the area.

Hundreds of residents have so far shared their views and ideas as part of the drafting of Stamford Hill's Area Action Plan. Once adopted, this document will provide a detailed planning framework for the next 15 years.

It aims to manage the pressures and demands of future growth in the neighbourhood in a way that benefits the local community.

Following an extensive 18-month programme of community workshops and meetings, a number of priorities have been identified. These include more family homes; improving public space; providing new schools and community facilities; and improving retail centres.

These priorities are now captured in the draft 'issues and options' plan, which is being consulted on across the neighbourhood.

The draft priorities are:

- Good quality design
- Housing
- Open space
- Transport
- Local shopping centres and the economy
- Meeting community needs.

Cllr Guy Nicholson,

Stamford Hill Library

Cabinet Member for Planning, said: "Hundreds of local residents have contributed to get the plan to this stage, so to those who have already taken part, a big thank you and do look over the draft plan and feedback your thoughts. Likewise, if you've not yet been involved, but would like to find out more, please do attend one of the drop-in sessions or read the document online."

To view the plan, visit: www.hackney.gov.uk/stamford-hill-aap

Hard copies of the document are available at Stamford Hill Library, 120 Stamford Hill, N16, and at drop-in sessions, also at Stamford Hill Library, on 8 March, from 5pm to 8pm, and on 21 March, from 2pm to 4pm.

The Mayor and councillors

Councillors are elected by residents and serve for four years. The last borough-wide elections took place in May 2014.

Councillors have a range of responsibilities, including helping to oversee Council services.

They hold advice surgeries where residents can meet their local representative and ask them to take up issues of concern. Generally they can help with Council related matters, but if the issue is the responsibility of another person or organisation, councillors can often point people in the right direction and tell residents who they need to see.

Hackney has 57 councillors representing areas called wards – see map below.

MAYOR PHILIP GLANVILLE

Hackney's executive Mayor Philip Glanville, was directly elected by the borough in September 2016. He is the political leader of the Council, overseeing the budget and all Council services. The Mayor holds monthly casework surgeries in the Town Hall. To book an appointment, email: mayor@hackney.gov.uk; or call: 020 8356 3269. Residents are first encouraged to contact their ward councillor. Civic and ceremonial duties are undertaken by the Speaker of Hackney who is chosen annually from the borough's 57 councillors. The current Speaker is Cllr Rosemary Sales.
